Having worked in children's publishing for over 20 years, Katherine Sully now writes both fiction and non-fiction books for children. She lives with her partner and daughter in the beautiful city of Bath, England. Carles Ballesteros was born in Badalona, near Barcelona, in 1977, and has lived in Santiago, Chile, since 2011. He teaches illustration at the local university and works as an illustrator for various publishers. After completing his degree in fine art at the Universitat de Barcelona, Carles worked as an art teacher, and also completed several courses in screen painting and animation. When he creates his illustrations, he tries to imagine himself as a child again, regaining those feelings and transferring them into his art. Carles uses a mixture of traditional drawing skills with digital techniques to create his works.

A lot of stuff to keep children occupied.

It is always fun to see kids playing with toys / replicas of the tools used in the construction of buildings - especially large buildings. In this construction site set they will have great opportunities to engage in imaginative play around a building under construction, put together the figures and tools, and read the informative book that begins with the first worker to enter the construction site for the day and unlock the gate. These sets remind me of my childhood when we played with "paper dolls." We had stiff paper dolls that had the ability to stand alone. They were not real durable, but they were fun and we had hours of fun playing with them. The Busy Builders sets have lots of "bells 'n whistles" that make this modern-day paper construction set come alive for the kids. Educational. Fun. Packed with imaginative play tools and sure to please. The whole product is "playable" - the box unfolds into the "house" or building with streets on both sides and curved pieces of street that connect. The figures have stand-up features. Once the set is removed from the box and "constructed," it can not fit back into the box without completely taking it apart. To extend the life of the set one will need to provide storage. It would be fun to have all three sets to play with and have a "city" so-to-speak. I recommend DISCLOSURE: I was provided complimentary product/book to facilitate this review. Opinions are my own and I was not compensated.

My kids loved putting these together. My son said they are fun as legos. They had a lot of fun and were able to do it independent of adult help. They are 9 and 10 years old. My younger son said that this would be hard for those that are younger and cannot read, but with an adult's help it should be just fine. They loved watching the sets come together and enjoyed all the aspects of the build and play. They also enjoyed the small book that came with the set. They stated that kids will be sad when the adult makes them put them away because they will have to be completely disassembled to fit back in the box it came in. A few of the pieces were loose when placed together, which caused a few small issues for keeping the pieces standing. There were a few minor issues, but overall, the kids thought these sets were really fun and a great way to work your mind through building and free play.

There's an awful lot of activity on a construction site. Kids may see bulldozers, diggers and dump trucks. In this cool box set kids will have fun building a school. Inside this handy portable playset kids will find large puzzle pieces that form the construction site and even construction workers. There is also a dump truck, a digger with a moveable arm and a working dump truck. Kids will see the inside of the school and what it looks like under construction. For those curious readers who want to learn more, there is a book inside with colorful illustrations and fun facts. Parents and caregivers will love this interactive and educational tool for their kids.
